Man's Unreasonableness

is often as great as woman's. But Thomas S. Austin, manager of the "Republican" of Leavenworth, Ind., was not unreasonable when he refused to allow the doctors to operate on his wife for female trouble. "Instead," he says, "we concluded to try Electric Bitters. My wife was then so sick she could hardly leave her bed and five (5) physicians had failed to relieve her. After taking Electric Bitters she was perfectly cured and can now perform all her household duties." Guaranteed by the Red Cross Pharmacy and Parlor Drug Store. Price 50c.

PUBLIC NOTICE.

Parents are particularly requested to instruct their children against doing anything in any way that will disgrace or destroy the street signs that have been put up recently. It has come to our notice that there are quite a few of the signs defaced and the enamel broken by boys throwing stones. The City Council have therefore caused this notice and warning to be published to the effect that any boys caught throwing stones at, or in any other way doing anything that will tend to destroy or deface any street sign in the city, will be punished as the law provides.

By order of the City Council.

A Feminine Instinct

(Original.)

During the late Russo-Japanese war in my company was Peter Alexievitch, the youngest of the enlisted men. Peter had not yet a beard; he was light complexioned and fair haired, with pink cheeks. He had all the delicacy and sensitiveness of a girl. His comrades called him Polly. There was another thing about Peter that was different from his associates—he was much better bred than they. He seemed to me to be the son of some country gentleman.

I felt sorry for little Peter from the first and shielded him as far as possible, excusing him from the most arduous and dangerous duties. I hoped that my leniency would not be noticed, but it was. Some of the men who would have liked to be called themselves called him Captain's Baby and said that, "though he was too fine for picket duty, he would soon be lording it over them as an officer." But the best men in the company did not feel in this way. They recognized in Peter something that had been created on different lines from themselves and would often insist on relieving him from certain severe duties from which I could not well protect him.

The first time Peter was under fire I watched him anxiously to see how he would behave. I greatly feared that after the fight was over his position in the company would be far worse than before. We were supporting the artillery, standing at rest while our guns sent their compliments to the Japs. Peter appeared to be interested in trying to see the shots that left the muzzles of our guns as they sped toward the enemy. There was in him all the intensity of a child watching the working of a new toy. Presently there came a reply. It went far above us and pleased Peter as much as our own shots had pleased him. The enemy gradually drew nearer our range until their shots all struck within a few yards of us. Having nothing to do, I kept my eyes on Peter. I judged it had not occurred to him we were in danger. I failed to see how he could be unconscious of what was so apparent, but fancied his obtuseness came from the gradual approach of the projectiles. At any rate, Peter seemed to be delighted at the sport and was shouting and laughing like a boy playing ball.

Another battery of ours was doing greater damage to the Jap works, who turned their guns from us to it, without having done us any damage. I was congratulating myself that the fighting, so far as we were concerned, was for the time being over and our boy had not disgraced himself, but at that moment a wounded man was carried by the blood streaming from a cut in his scalp, and what should Peter do but shudder and turn pale. He cast a frightened glance above, as though it had just dawned upon him that this wound had come from the shells which had so delighted him, then turned to run.

"Stand fast, you little fool! Don't you see the danger is over?" thundered the lieutenant.

Peter gathered his nerves and returned to his place. I wished I could send him home to his mother, for he the more impressed me as a boy not sufficiently developed to warrant his being yet tossed from her apron strings.

At the first battle we were engaged in the lieutenant was obliged to strike Peter with the flat of his sword to keep him in the ranks, but when the fight was on little "Polly" was wild with the excitement of battle. When it was over he fell in a dead faint.

I determined to make an effort to procure Peter's discharge, and sent up an application to headquarters to that effect, based, first, on the fact that he was physically incapable of performing the duties of a soldier, and, second, that he was mentally deficient in this—he could not discriminate between the presence and absence of danger. He was invariably undisturbed when his life was at risk and in terror when the risk had passed.

I did not hear from the application for a long while, then I received an order to report in person at the colonel's tent. I found there a young man whose resemblance to "Polly" startled me. The colonel, taking up a paper, said to me: "This is your application for the discharge of Private Alexievitch. Owing to the mental deficiency stated, I referred the case to the medical director. This is his indorsement:

"The idiosyncrasy of being unconscious of real danger and terrified when there is no danger is peculiar to women. I would recommend that Private Alexievitch be examined to determine his or her sex."

"Having been constantly engaged of late," the colonel went on, "with the enemy, this application has been unattended to. Now this young man comes with the story that Private Alexievitch is his sister, who took his place when he was conscripted. I desire that you, if convinced of the truth of the story, take him into your company and discharge his sister."

Returning to my camp with the young man, I asked why his sister took his place in the army. He said that at the time of his conscription their mother was at the point of death and to lose him would have killed her. His sister told her mother that she had received an appointment to teach at Moscow and must go at once or lose the position. Instead, she donned man's clothes and personated the conscript. His mother had recovered and he wished to take his own place in the ranks.

When Lisa and Peter Alexievitch met in my tent they were a happy pair. Lisa went home and Peter became in time my first lieutenant.

IT IS SERIOUS.

Some Barre People Fail To Realize This Seriousness.

The constant aching of a bad back, The weariness, the tired feeling, The pains and aches of kidney ills Are serious—if neglected. Dangerous urinary troubles follow. A Barre citizen shows you how to avoid them.

C. Milne (retired), address 35 Branch St., says: "When I first noticed a dull aching in the small of my back, about three years ago I did not pay much attention to it, although very often the twinges radiated to the shoulders. But by and by, when I noticed it every morning when getting up after an hour or so, and when in the evening I sat down to read a newspaper I found that the dull chronic aching kept up its aggravation, then I became anxious about my condition, for I knew there was some disturbed action of the kidneys. I was often so nervous from the irksome aching that I was compelled to get up and walk around the room so as to keep the miserable feeling under subjection. When suffering very acutely I happened to read about Doan's Kidney Pills and I was induced from the advertisement to go to E. A. Drown's drug store for a box. After a few days' treatment I noticed a decided improvement and a continuation of the use of the pills completely stopped the annoying attack. Since then I have not noticed any symptoms of a recurrence."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Postmaster: Enclosed, Buffalo, N. Y., sole agents for the United States.

OBITUARY RECORD.

Sabrina S. Camp.

Mrs. Sabrina S. Camp, who died at her home in East Bethel on Saturday, Oct. 28, was the daughter of Chauncey Goodrich and Susan S. Averill. She was born in Barre, Vt., June 23, 1840, and soon after, upon the death of her mother, went to live with her grandparents in Barre.

On March 3, 1864, she was married to J. W. Camp of Randolph, Vt., by the pastor of the Methodist church in Barre, Rev. Edmund Copeland. They came at once to the farm in East Bethel which had been their home for more than 41 years. One son, Burton Goodrich, was born to them, and became the idol of his mother. In 1880, at the age of 15 years, he died, leaving her heart-broken.

Mrs. Camp was never a very strong woman, and for that reason never minded much in society. In her home the duties that came from day to day were well cared for, and she proved herself a faithful, loving wife.

In the early part of October she was taken sick and grew gradually worse during several weeks. She managed, however, to attend to her household duties until Thursday, October 26, when she was stricken with double pneumonia. She lived but about 36 hours, and died Saturday morning.

The funeral was held Monday at her former home. Rev. F. M. Baker of Randolph Center officiated. The bearers were four nephews of Mrs. Camp. Those present from out of town were C. W. Averill and sister of Barre, Henry Camp and wife of Plainfield, Albert Camp and family of Tunbridge and Frank Camp of St. Johnsbury. Many beautiful floral tributes came from loving friends and neighbors, who were also very kind and thoughtful of Mr. Camp in his affliction, lending their assistance and comforting words freely. A sister is also left to mourn her loss, Mrs. Tryphenia Austin of Blissfield, Mich.

Mrs. Camp was buried in the East Bethel cemetery.
